

DESIGN/BUILD/LEARN
PROPOSAL FOR IMLS National Leadership Grant 2015

David and Lorraine Cheng Library
William Paterson University

References

- Blauch, D. N., & Carroll, F. A. (2014). 3D Printers Can Provide an Added Dimension for Teaching Structure-Energy Relationships. Journal of Chemical Education, 91(8), 1254-1256. doi:10.1021/ed4007259
- Drake, R. L. (2014). An addition to the neighborhood: 3D printed anatomy teaching resources. Anatomical sciences education, 7 (6), p. 419.
- IMLS. (2015). Learning in Libraries (Forum Compilation) (p. 18). Kansas City Public Library: Kansas City, MO. Retrieved from <https://www.imls.gov/sites/default/files/publications/documents/imlsfocuslearninginlibrariesfinalreport.pdf>
- Marallo, Lauren A. (2014.) Integrating Art + STEM: An exploratory study of three science centers. Seattle, WA: University of Washington Master of Arts thesis.
- McMenamin, P. G. (2014). The production of anatomical teaching resources using 3D (three-dimensional) printing technology. Anatomical sciences education, 7(6), p. 479.
- Papert, S. (1991). Situating constructionism. In I. Harel & S. Papert (Eds.), Constructionism (pp. 1-11). Norwood, NJ: Ablex.
- Scalfani, V. F., & Vaid, T. P. (2014). 3D Printed Molecules and Extended Solid Models for Teaching Symmetry and Point Groups. Journal of Chemical Education, 91(8), 1174-1180. doi:10.1021/ed400887t
- Valverde, I., et al. (2015). 3D printed models for planning endovascular stenting in transverse aortic arch hypoplasia. Catheter Cardiovascular Intervention. PMID: 25557983.