Early Childhood Education Majors: P-3 or P-3/TSD (Teachers of Students with Disabilities) for Students Entering William Paterson University at Mercer County Community College, Fall 2017 and Spring 2018.

Students who graduate with an AA or AS degree from Mercer County Community College can now complete a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Early Childhood Education from WPU on the MCCC campus. After successfully completing the early childhood major and a second liberal arts major in psychology or liberal studies, students can qualify for the Preschool through Third Grade (P-3) certification with or without the TSD endorsement.

Certification requirements include passing the Praxis II exam: Early Childhood Education: Content Knowledge (Test code: 5025) and the EdTPA (Teaching Performance Assessment).

Entering students must have completed the AA or AS degree since January 1, 2005. Six credits of education courses from MCCC's AA in Education are accepted towards the major (EDU 102 and EDU 109). (Students must have two college-level math courses, two science courses, and two history courses (one American) to complete the major and must meet all WPU graduation requirements, including six credits of foreign language to be taken at MCCC.) For the second liberal arts major, students can select Psychology or Liberal Studies in Humanities and Social Sciences with a concentration in any two of the following—English, History, Political Science, Psychology, or Sociology.

The Early Childhood Education majors offered consist of 30-40 credits, depending on the option selected. Both majors include two supervised practicum placements in neighboring school districts (first, one full day a week and then, two full days a week), followed by a full-time clinical teaching experience. Every student will have both urban and suburban field experiences at a range of grade levels. Completion in three semesters is dependent upon the number of credits the student takes each semester, transfer courses, summer work, and the selected second liberal arts major.

Students are eligible for substitute teaching licenses once they have completed 60 college credits. Community college students should begin the process of applying for a substitute teaching license when they are in their final semester of courses at the community college (even before they complete the required 60 credits). They can apply at any public school district office where they would consider substitute teaching. They must complete an application and then make arrangements to be fingerprinted. Fees associated with the application include approximately $75.00 for fingerprinting and approximately $125 for the license.

Please note: Students entering into the Early Childhood Education majors must successfully pass the Praxis 1 Core requirement which includes exams in the disciplines of reading, math and writing. Successfully completing the Praxis 1 Core is a state requirement that must be satisfied before any education courses may be taken at WPU@MCCC. It is recommended that the Praxis I CORE be taken immediately. Sign up at www.ets.org.

Liberal Studies-An Interdisciplinary Major in the Arts, Humanities, and Social Sciences

The Liberal Studies Major Offers A Broad-based Education Program That Is Ideal for Teachers

The Liberal Studies Major combines interdisciplinary training in the arts, humanities and social sciences, allowing students to design a flexible yet rigorous program. Students may select from a wide variety of disciplinary and interdisciplinary tracks. The major is ideal for those who seek a broad-based education and for pre-service teachers seeking certification in P-3 and P-3/TSD (Teacher of Students with Disabilities).

Upon completion, students will understand the interconnection among the arts, humanities and social sciences; have considerable exposure to two academic areas; and develop research, written, and oral communication skills. The Major is offered in collaboration between the College of the Humanities and Social Sciences and the College of Arts and Communication. It is housed in the Department of Philosophy.

Liberal Studies Outcomes:

- Inquiry and problem solving
- Critical thinking
- Creative expression
- Communication skills
- Research and synthesis
- Mastery of content
- Use of technology
- Career preparation and lifelong learning

What Can You Do With a Degree in Liberal Studies?

A Liberal Studies degree opens a wide range of careers. In today's information-driven economy, you will need critical thinking skills for continuous learning on the job. Many employers prefer versatile, interdisciplinary thinkers with broad knowledge about the world over narrow specialists with expertise in a single discipline.

The Liberal Studies Program gives you a strong background in two or more academic disciplines, and trains you to think critically about the practical and intellectual connections between them. Our internship program challenges you to apply what you are learning to your professional future, or to do a research project in collaboration with our faculty. Our senior capstone experience helps you contextualize your learning and prepares for your next step after college.

A degree in Liberal Studies trains you to understand complex information, and to communicate it to diverse audiences with different perspectives. It gives you the skills needed to identify the information you need to make good decisions in a fluid and ever-changing world. Below is a list of some careers you might pursue after completing a degree in Liberal Studies:

Teaching, Law, Politics, Human Resources, Technical Writing, Advertising, Marketing, Social Work, Community organizing, Journalism, Public Relations, Sales, Editing, Creative Writing, Library, Management, Government work, Communications or Non-Profit organizations

Psychology Major

Psychology is typically defined as the study of behavior. This simple definition compasses the complexities of psychology and includes the systematic study of thought, emotion, cognition, perception, learning, development, personality, interpersonal relationships, and more at the biological, mental, and social level.

The psychology major is one of the most popular majors at William Paterson University. The major consists of 38 credits designed to expose the students to the breadth of Psychology and includes: developmental psychology, social psychology, clinical psychology, cognitive psychology, and physiological psychology. Our psychology faculty are dedicated teachers and distinguished scholars.

The Department of Psychology is situated within the College of Humanities and Social Sciences, serving both undergraduate and graduate students. The Department provides undergraduates with core and elective courses that introduce the theoretical, conceptual, methodological, empirical and ethical foundations of psychology. The Department expects that all students will demonstrate growth in knowledge and critical thinking, including substantial development of analytic, writing and speaking skills. It is our hope and expectation that students will also acquire a foundation for lifelong learning and a good grasp on career and professional development issues in psychology and associated fields. The program offers relatively small class sizes, and individualized academic advisement. Moreover, the department's mission is buttressed by a strong belief in the intrinsic value of advancing knowledge.

William Paterson University's psychology program allows graduates to pursue a variety of jobs upon earning their bachelor's degree. It also prepares them to continue graduate study in the field.

A major in psychology provides a solid background for those interested in advanced study in such areas as social work, education, law, public administration, business, medicine and theology. Within the field itself, career opportunities exist at bachelors, masters, and doctoral levels. Here are some examples.

Bachelor's level:

Social Services, Health Care, Human Resources, Marketing or Market Research

Master's level:

Social Worker (MSW), Mental Health Worker (e.g. alcohol/drug abuse, school, mental hospital, agencies), Organizational Consultant, Community College Instructor or Research Technician.
