Careers in Public Interest Law

Thursday, October 16, 2014, 12:30-1:45 pm

Raubinger Hall, Room 1 (enter from side entrance)

Jason Williamson is a Staff Attorney – Criminal Law Reform Project of the American Civil Liberties Union. Prior to joining the ACLU, he served as a litigation associate at the law firm of Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison LLP in New York. He began his legal career in New Orleans, first as a staff attorney for the Juvenile Justice Project of Louisiana and later as a defense attorney and founding member of Juvenile Regional Services. He received his J.D. from New York University School of Law and his Bachelor's degree from Harvard University.

For those students interested in law school, public interest law offers an exciting area of practice and a potentially rewarding career path. Is public interest law for you? What are the practice settings of public interest law? What kind of work does one do? What kinds of issues are addressed? What kind of preparation do you need? Can one support oneself with a public interest career? These questions and more will be addressed in this Pre-Law workshop.
